

As you can see, Browsealoud can bring the core library value of universal access to the online experience of patrons with a wide range of accessibility challenges. You can now reach all of your patrons, including those with vision impairment, attention and focus disorders, dyslexia, language barriers, and literacy challenges. Browsealoud allows you to reach these people with a simple, easy-to-use tool. A patron with vision impairment can now search your website for upcoming library events; a non-English speaking patron can access information on the library's website; a teen with severe ADD can sit down at one of your public computers, able to focus and do research. It's all possible with Browsealoud.

No matter their circumstances, people with access challenges deserve an equal opportunity to use your digital library services. Browsealoud through Library Market will give you a seamlessly integrated, easy-to-use tool for engaging these users both on your website and in your libraries.
